Bea's Buzz

Shana Tova belatedly to all — I hope your High Holidays were meaningful ones, spent with the people who matter most to you.
We kicked off the year on September 15th at Society Night, and it was, genuinely, one of the proudest evenings of my life. Thank you to everyone who came out to celebrate with me.

I also want to say something publicly to Laurel Linetsky-Fleisher. Laurel gave my introduction that night during an extraordinarily difficult and harrowing time for her family, and we have since learned that her husband passed away. That she stood up for me with such warmth and grace, carrying what she was carrying, is something I will not forget. Laurel, our whole chapter's thoughts are with you, and we are endlessly grateful for everything you gave us that night and every year before it.

Looking Back

Since then, we've had a terrific CE evening on October 6th with Dr. Andrew Kay and Dr. Manor Haas on "Endo/Perio Related Cases: How to Diagnose and Treatment Plan," generously sponsored by Straumann. Attendance was strong, and the discussion afterward ran long in the best possible way.

Looking Ahead

We have a genuinely full slate between now and the new year:

Marshall Freilich Oral Medicine Lecture — November 12, 2026 — "Digitally Executed Immediate Implant Therapy," sponsored by Nobel BioCare

Friday, November 20 — Fall Seminar, full-day Core 1 CE with Dr. Manor Haas

Sunday, November 22 — our annual Chanukah Party

Watch your inbox for registration details on each, and please bring a colleague who isn't yet a member — more on that below.

A Different Way to Think About the Purchase Program

I want to spend a moment on something that doesn't always get discussed warmly: the Alpha Omega Purchase Program.

It's easy to think of AOPP as just another vendor — another place to order supplies, to be compared line-by-line against whoever is cheapest this month. I'd like to offer a different frame. AOPP isn't a side benefit bolted onto your membership; it's one of the ways your membership actually funds the rest of what Alpha Omega does. The margin on every order is margin that comes back to this chapter, in the CE programming, the social events, and the philanthropic work that makes Alpha Omega what it is. Treating it as a line item to be haggled over misses what it actually is: a quiet, ongoing act of investment in this community, made every time you place an order you were going to place anyway. I'd ask you to think of it less as a purchase and more as a form of giving back that costs you nothing extra.

Why This Work Still Matters

I won't spend long on this, because I'd rather you walk away thinking about light than darkness — but I do want to be honest about the moment we're in. This year has brought a well-documented rise in antisemitic incidents, not just here but globally: serious, verified attacks on Jewish community members in Milan, violence and institutional bans on demonstrations in Paris tied to safety concerns, and here at home, a continued pattern of protests outside synagogues and Jewish schools, antisemitic imagery at public demonstrations, and a year-

FROM THE EDITOR

Welcome to fall in the era of global warming. As I am writing this, I still find I have to decide most mornings if I should even take a jacket to go outside. If only this could last through to March I would be a very happy person. Alas, I know that soon enough we will be hunkering down inside to avoid the cold and snow that is inevitable in Canada. I invite you to sit and read this copy of the AORTA to take your mind off any and all inclement weather.

You will find information about the recent, and always well attended, Evening Continuing Education Program. You can also read about upcoming programs, including the Fall Seminar and Chanukah Party. Ron Barzilay has sent a letter to the editor to respond to last issue's letter sent by Cal Torneck. Warren Hellen has weighed in on past Alpha Omega memorabilia with pictures of pledge pins that both he and his father received on joining what was then AO Fraternity.

Finally, we have contributions from some of our usuals, including laugh-out-loud humour by Steven Brown, an article by Stan Kogon that we can all relate to, and a heartwarming picture from Barry Korzen.

Please enjoy this edition of the AORTA.

over-year rise in documented antisemitic incidents across Canada.

I share this not to alarm anyone, but because it's the honest backdrop against which this chapter does its work. Alpha Omega has never been more relevant to its founding purpose. Our answer to that backdrop isn't to retreat into fear — it's to be so proud, so united, and so engaged with each other that we build something worth belonging to regardless of what's happening outside these walls.

Which brings me to the thing I'll ask of every one of you, again: if you know a Jewish dentist who isn't yet a member, invite them in. Have the actual conversation. Strength in numbers isn't a slogan — it's the entire model this organization runs on.

Warm regards, and I'll see many of you at the Chanukah Party,

Beatrice

Four B's

A dental assistant, who knew I was Jewish, stopped me in the hall to say that she had just returned from Toronto and while there, she joined a friend in a bakery/coffee shop. She ordered a cup of coffee and a biscotti, while her friend had a tea and a chocolate bubka, which she kindly shared. "It was delicious," she said with a smile. Before I could reply with a feigned "Great!," she asked why is it called a bubka? I hesitated and said, "Now that is a good question, and the truth is, I do not know." While digging around for an answer, I came across a group of B's and a delightful mix of food and nostalgia.

B #1
Bubka, Babka

It seems that this pastry originated in the early 19th century in Poland and eastern parts of the Ukraine. When there was surplus challah dough, oil and some sugar were added, the dough was flattened, coated with jam or cinnamon, folded into layers, then placed in a bread tin and baked along with the challah. Later, chocolate became the favourite filling, although poppyseed (mohn) was popular as well. Over time, the bubka evolved from the bread shape to a more familiar appearing treat. Before baking, the dough was shaped into a log and the finished bubka would be cut crosswise like a strudel. Variations of the shape took hold and now bubkas may be braided, shaped like a crown, or just a plump mound. My Mom, (she was a good cook and a superb baker), never made the traditional bubka with chocolate, because she didn't like chocolate. When she made a bubka, it looked like a strudel but filled with mohn.

As often happens with bakeries and bakers, regional variation and family preferences became ingrained. Eventually, the Jewish version of the pastry took on a different physical shape from the Polish type. By the 1950s, the layered and braided versions now found in Jewish bakeries, expanded to bakeries in Western Europe and then to New York. As it spread across the USA and Canada, bakeries added their own flourish, with new fillings such as almond paste, and cheese, and some with streusel on top. If you visit a Polish or German deli or bakery, you will no doubt spot a familiar looking bubka-like pastry.

My Mom didn't bake challah since Health Bread was around the corner. However, she continued to make yeast pastries in a delicate roll form, which today would be similar to cinnamon buns. Her children called them 'Killers.' Returning to London after a visit toting a fresh supply of 'Killers,' we never made it back without munching a few on the drive home.

Back to the origin of the Yiddish word 'bubka.' I am not an etymologist and my Yiddish, which was never good, is now reserved for idioms and trash words. This is the best I can find using common resources. It seems that the original word was derived from an Easter pastry called baba or babka, which was also a Polish diminutive word for 'grandmother.' It is obvious that there must be some connection between the word Bubka, derived from the Polish Baba, and the Yiddish word Bubbe. As many generations of grandmothers made the pastry, the association of the soft, sweet, yummy bread-like bubka with Bubbe seems appropriate.

Buballa, Bubaleh, Bubula

In North America, matzah was commercially available from the Manischewitz company around 1880 and ground matzah, or matzah meal, was offered by 1930. There is a vast rabbinic literature devoted to matzah and what is kosher, chametz and acceptable for Passover and even what can be made with each type of matzah and matzah meal. Buballa, the matzah pancake, can be made at any time of the year, but I can't recall ever having one outside of Passover. The buballa, which likely originated from Eastern Europe and Poland consisted of matzah meal, eggs, salt, a bit of oil and a variety of secret ingredients which could include seltzer, baking soda, and whipped egg whites. My Mother-in-law made the full pan-sized soft buballa every Passover. My Mother made them to look more like traditional small pancakes. I liked them with a bit of salt; however, my brothers doused them in pancake syrup or jam. The origin of the name is questionable. Some suggest it derives from the Yiddish word for bubbles – bulbe.

B #3
Bubala

Bubala should not be confused with buballa. Bubala is a term often used by grandmothers or parents to address kids usually between birth and 50 years of age! It is a term of endearment meaning 'sweet thing' or 'precious.' Perhaps the buballa pancake took on the term because it is often eaten with sweet toppings, or vice versa - who knows. The term is used for both boys and girls and is readily accepted. My kids and grandkids never complained over our use of the word. Occasionally the term 'tatele' or 'mamela' is used for little ones, but bubala was always used around our house. I don't think there was ever any confusion when a parent said "Bubala go eat your Buballa.

Letter To The Editor

B #4
Bubbe, Bubby, Bubbie, etc.

This is the last of my B's and the most comforting. The origin of the word Bubbe is likely found in Polish and Slavic contribution to Ashkenazi Yiddish. The simple English translation is 'grandmother,' but the meaning has much more depth. Reading the word 'grandmother' in a novel conveys little of the charm, sweetness and comfort the word 'Bubbe' conveys. Untold generations have imbued the word with sentiment based on significant family tradition and personal interactions. The word Bubbe brings back tangible memories of favourite foods, rooms too warm, long hugs and worldly advice- some wanted and some not so. Bubbes come in all flavours. Sheila had a Bubbe who was a classic; warm, loving, pinches on the cheek and the occasional 'Phetoo!' when the evil eye needed to be warded off. My paternal Bubbe was a Russian matriarch who ruled the nest of eight children and a horde of grandchildren. She treated each grandchild the same-with a moderate degree of indifference. Yet her presence demanded our robust family of uncles, aunts, and cousins to meet every Sunday to share a typical heavy Russian meal, such as baked meat varnikas. My maternal grandmother passed away before I was born, and in her place, my great aunt simply became our Bubbe, although we always referred to her as Auntie, she was our Bubbe at heart. Although my grandkids live in a secular world, they refer to Sheila only as Bubbe, and we wouldn't want it any other way.

You won't hear this at The Stratford Festival

Look, Bubala, while I finish my Bubka.
Go to the kitchen and eat the
Buballa, Bubbe made for you.

Stan Kogon.

Response to Cal Torneck's Letter to the Editor

Re: "Comments on President Perlmutter's Letter to the Provost and Proposal for Further Action"

I read Cal Torneck's response regarding the Dean of the Faculty of Dentistry and the antisemitic content associated with his teaching materials.

His message appears to be that we should forgive and forget because the Dean is a good person who made a mistake.

This is not about denying the possibility of remorse or personal growth. It is about recognizing the reality faced by Jewish Canadians today. Antisemitism has surged to levels we have not witnessed in our lifetimes. Jewish schools, synagogues, businesses, students, and neighbourhoods have faced threats, vandalism, intimidation, and violence. Jewish students have also experienced harassment on university campuses, including in Toronto.

This is Canada 2026, not the 1930s, but history teaches us that antisemitism grows when it is minimized, excused, or met with no meaningful consequences. It is not simply "about Israel." Antisemitism existed long before the State of Israel, and attacks on Jewish people, institutions, and symbols in Canada must be recognized for what they are.

When a person in a senior leadership role, particularly the Dean of a Faculty of Dentistry, introduces antisemitic messaging into educational material, it cannot be treated as a minor personal error. A Dean's words carry institutional authority. Such conduct validates prejudice, damages trust, and sends a harmful message to Jewish students, faculty, and professionals.

It is about accountability. Good people can make serious mistakes, but serious mistakes involving prejudice and institutional leadership require more than an apology and a request to move on. They require acknowledgment of harm, education, and meaningful consequences.

I am grateful that Alpha Omega's leadership has addressed this matter clearly and firmly. I stand behind our International President, Dr. Sharon Perlmutter, and the leadership of the Toronto Chapter. I am proud that Alpha Omega remains a strong voice for Jewish dentists and for the Jewish community within dentistry.

We must be clear: antisemitism is unacceptable. We cannot normalize it, minimize it, or simply forgive and forget when the dignity and safety of Jewish people are at stake.

Sincerely
Ron Barzilay

Please Listen Carefully, As Our Menu Items Have Changed

By Steven Brown

Please press 1 for 'Ignorance'. Press 2 for 'Stupidity'. Press 3 for 'Let me redirect you to the correct person'. Or, Press 4 for, 'If we are disconnected, don't expect me to call back.' Etc. Etc. Etc. Life ain't easy in the 21st century. But, 'Honestly', 'At the end of the day', 'When push comes to shove', 'Ultimately', 'When all is said and done', 'In the final analysis', most people on the other end, just want to go home. Not everyone is a dentist, that can't wait to get to work every day! And as an aside, while sitting on my porch, I just saw someone running by- 'Exercising', while on their phone, speaking loudly, carrying three water bottles, and wearing a mask. Is this not their home planet. Or did they just press 1 for 'Stupidity'. Geez, I don't usually get this angry, so early in a story.

But getting back to my first, and only wife. (44 years and counting). I watched her make a 'U turn' today. And any resemblance to that letter, or any other letter in the alphabet for that matter, would be purely coincidental! And that same night, we had a BBQ for our neighbours, and we had to take out 12 heavy chairs to the backyard. When I got home, Paula had already taken them out. I got angry. - Again. So I yelled, "Why didn't you wait until I got home. I would have watched you do it!" But I'm not all that horrible. Paula has wanted a new front door for a long time. I finally surprised her when the salesman showed up to show us the options. Who knew it was going to be $14,790. So I told her it wasn't just a 44th anniversary present. It was a 44th, 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, and 49th anniversary present. I'm going to amortize it over 6 years. And then. Believe it or not, I actually tried to compliment her. (Impossible.) I told her that her teeth looked like pearls. She said "Who's this Pearl you're seeing?"

Sticking with family. I'm writing a little kiddies book. I made up my first joke/ riddle. What do dinosaures do when they go to sleep. Dino Snores!. Hilarious!!!!!! And now back to George Costanza, who you all, by this time know; - I was George, before George was George. He had Frank and Estelle, and I had Art and Adele. Not a rhyming coincidence. Anyway, two quick stories. We used to visit my Aunt and Uncle in La Jolla, in California every summer. When we got a Taxi at the Airport, 'they' (politically correct am I), asked where we were going. My mother answered La Jolla, pronouncing the J like a J. The driver said "Mam, we pronounce the J like an H here. It would be pronounced La Hoya." "O.K." my mother said. The driver then asked how long we were staying, and my mother proudly answered - "Through Hoon, and Hooli". OYE! Also, imagine this growing up. When I was a baby, my mother refused to breastfeed me. She said she just wanted to be friends! More family. My oldest daughter, at 16 years of age went to her first concert with a girlfriend. It was 'The Guess Who'. Throughout the concert they kept yelling "PLAY PINBALL WIZARD!"

As always on to the students. A student passed me and said "Dr. Brown. You're sitting here alone, and laughing. What's going on?" I said "I'm telling myself a joke I've never heard before." And my endo instructor buddy at school, who shall remain nameless. Let's call him Dr. Joe Tam. - Another instructor was telling us about an Oral Surgeon, who took out the wrong tooth, because the tilted 7 looked like the 8, and the 8 was subgingival. And Tam chimed in with "Well, I can understand that. It's really dark in there!" I agree. And just a random question. If 'THEY' wanted us to last this long, shouldn't we have had a third set of teeth? And I don't mean dentures. Just asking. And a great line by a student. They asked - "If the midline is off, on an upper full denture; can't we just send them to a Plastic Surgeon, to move the nose over?" I'll have to consider that next time. And a not so great line. Upper wax try in. A student asked me what they should do if the teeth didn't occlude correctly. I said "THAT'S WHY WE DO A TRY IN! You can move them into position." 'They said "Should I get the Blow Torch?"

Let's get random as usual. I was talking to a labour and delivery nurse on a bike trip, and I told her I work a summer job just like her. She asked which hospital. I said "No. I do Uber Eats to make some extra money. And when I have to go far, far, uphill, to give them their order, I call it 'Labour and Delivery' also." These will be stupid so you can skip them if you want to. I went to a yard sale, and they would only sell me two feet! Aye Carumba! And when I was in school, there was a girl we called 'Butter Face'. She had an incredible body beyond belief…….'Butter Face'! And then there was the Rabbi who couldn't resist buying the talking Jewish parrot he saw at the pet store. Only $1,000. He figured he'd make it up and more, by inviting 10 wealthy congregants to his office, and betting each $1,000 that the parrot could talk about Jewish holidays. They came. They bet, and unexpectedly the parrot remained completely silent!. He lost $10,000. When they left, he started screaming at the parrot, telling the parrot it cost him $10,000. The parrot replied -(You have to squak this. No really. You have to squak!) - "But think how much we'll make, when you bring them back and bet them again, at Yom HaKippurim!"

We were riding past a field, and a sign said 'Ecologically Sensitive Area'. So I looked back at Paula, and said "No jokes about the field. It's too sensitive." Told Ya! When we got home, I took one of my old envelopes, and slid it across the table. She asked what I was doing. I said "I'm pushing the envelope." And I recently called 311, to report that we needed a red light camera in my neighbourhood, because of a very unsafe intersection, with cars coming off the highway at a high rate of speed. I guess, once again, I must have pressed 1 for Stupidity. 'They' answered - "I'm sorry sir, but there haven't been enough accidents at that intersection." I responded "I guess I'll have to wait."

Cars again. An Instructor said his wife was trying to back out of a parking spot, and backed up into a pole. So she pulled forward, and backed up again; - into the same pole. I said (really). "Maybe she's Bipolar!" Oh, take a breath. Get a life! Get a sense of humour, or stop reading. Cuz it's going to get worse. 'Leave It To Beaver'. Maybe my favourite show growing up. Two great lines. Whitey, and the Beaver are at the barbershop, and when Whitey's haircut is finished the barber says "So Whitey. How do you like it? And Whitey responds "I guess it'll have to do, until I can get to a real barber." And a true line you couldn't get away with today, when June says to Ward, - "Ward. Don't you think you were a little rough on the Beaver last night!" OMG!

Considering this last summer. Global warming is way better in the winter. (Oh, take a pill.) Back to 1964, (I'm Doc Brown. I can do that); and the Toronto Maple Leafs. Number 23. Eddie Shack. The enforcer. Leafs down 4-1 to the Bruins with 2 minutes to play. Shack hasn't seen the ice all night. Punch Imlach yells down the bench -"Shack. Get out there." (You know why.) And Eddie yells back - "Hey Coach. You want me to win it, or just tie it up?" And almost in conclusion. I have a question. Once again. What is the most important invention, or discovery of all time? - The wheel? Fire? Or glasses? This is a really hard one, because I don't mean glasses, glasses. I mean Liquor glasses. Now which one?

Now in conclusion. Really. I have a Saab story. It's gonna make you cry. It's about a car crash. Get it? No!? Anyway. I was saving the worst one for the end. Although as the reader, the worst one is really up to you. Barry is waiting.
